

Single-spin qubit magnetic spectroscopy of the correlated electronic states

Eugene Demler<sup>1,2</sup>

<sup>1</sup>*Institute for Theoretical Physics,
ETH Zurich, 8093 Zurich, Switzerland*

<sup>2</sup>Physics Department, Harvard University, Cambridge, MA 02467, USA

A single-spin qubit placed near the surface of a material acquires an additional contribution to its relaxation rate due to magnetic noise created by low energy excitations of the electron system. I will discuss how this noise can be used to investigate correlated electronic states, including superconductors, magnetic insulators, and one dimensional systems.